THE STATE OF PLAY

A round-up of the key takeaways from the conference

WHAT HAVE WE HEARD?

Ensure all that could benefit from Higher Education, do.

Make data and reporting widely accessible so advisers can focus on supporting student choice.

Pathways into higher education can be as squiggly as careers – bring more transparency for the benefit of all.

Adviser communities sharing ideas and best practise can overcome future challenges together.

2026 DATES AND DEADLINES

14 January 2026 is the equal consideration deadline for applications to courses starting in 2026. The reject by default deadline is 13 May 2026.

The Adviser Portal opens on 6 May to prepare for 2026 applications which open on 13 May 2025.

UCAS is reintroducing the end of March advisory deadline to encourage earlier decision-making.

UCAS will send out dates and deadlines for 2027 entry before the end of this year.

NEW PERSONAL STATEMENTS FOR 2026 ENTRY

PERSONAL STATEMENT ADVICE: LAW

Explore this section ▾

What should you write in a law personal statement? From wider reading to spot-on spelling and grammar, you'll need a personal statement that makes a convincing case. We asked admissions tutors to share their top dos and don'ts.

'Try to demonstrate that you have a genuine interest in law as a discipline. This interest can come from any number of experiences you may have had, be they academic, personal or professional.' Dr Ryan Murphy | Law Admissions Tutor – Aston University

What should you write in a law personal statement?

Bringing your interest in law to life is key. If you're already studying law, then you might want to talk about topics you've enjoyed and any wider reading you've done.

Haven't studied law at A level (or equivalent)? Don't worry – there aren't usually subject-specific entry requirements for law degrees. Learn more about the 'unspoken rules' of university entry requirements here.

Dr Murphy suggests these other ways to demonstrate your engagement with law:

- A book you've read that had a legal dimension to it.
- Work experience, which could be in a solicitor's firm or a mini-pupillage, but equally could be shadowing at your local Citizens Advice Bureau (CAB), some charity work, or even your Saturday job.
- Visiting your local magistrates' court, the Crown Court, or your nearest employment tribunal. As Dr Murphy puts it, 'the English legal system is open and receptive to those wishing to experience law in action'.
- Join a debating club, or start your own. If you have the opportunity to conduct a personal project or the Extended Project Qualification (EPQ), consider giving it a legal focus.

But don't simply list what you've done. Write about relevant experiences in your statement in a reflective way. What did you see? What did you learn? Why did it enhance your interest in law?

What else to include in your law statement

- Why you want to study law: bring this to life by focusing in on aspects of law that are of particular interest to you, how it relates to your current studies, and what additional reading you've embarked on. But keep it concise – three or so paragraphs is probably fine.
